Really, I think it is not fair to interrupt the story in this way, said Minnie, with a laugh. Right, lass, right, said the captain. Come, lieutenant, spin away at yer yarn, and don t ventur too much commentary thereon, cause it s apt to lead to error, an ye know, as the poet says- Errors in the heart breed errors in the brain, An these are apt to twist ye wrong again. I m not xactly sure o the precise words in this case, but that s the sentiment, and everybody knows that sentiment is everything in poetry, whether ye understand it or not. Fire away, lieutenant, an don t be long-winded if ye can help it. Well, to return to the point, resumed Lindsay. The town was certainly thrown into a tremendous state of some sort, for the people had no arms of any kind wherewith to defend themselves. There were no regular soldiers, no militia, and no volunteers. Everybody ran wildly about in every direction, not knowing what to do. There was no leader, and, in short, the town was very like a shoal of small fish in a pool when a boy wades in and makes a dash amongst them. At last a little order was restored by the Provost, who was a sensible old man, and an old soldier to boot, but too infirm to take as active a part in such an emergency as he would have done had he been a dozen years younger. He,...
