Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: . . . conclude that although a certain amount of relative proper motion must exist in this group, yet the apparent motions, as observed, are as much due to errors of observation as to the actually existing motions, and when the latter shall finally be discovered they will, on the average, be found as near to zero as to the values indicated by all the observations yet made. Consequently, the most probable values of these relative proper motions must be regarded as zero. Prof. Pritchard, from the general agreement of his observations with those of the later determinations, seems to feel authorized to assert a little more positively the actual existence of these relative proper motions. His conclusions are as follows: First, with regard to the 14 stars which have been measured by the two thoroughly independent processes; the general accord of the final results points unmistakably to the existence of certain small motions of these stars inter se; but of so slight an amount, that their exact determination does not seem fully within the reach of observations as yet extant; these must be left for the effects of a greater lapse of time, which shall make them more directly apparent in amount, and to the astronomy of the future. Of the remaining stars, although meridian observations do not at present exist so as to corroborate the evidences of relative motion afforded by the combined micrometer measures made at Konigsberg, Paris, and Oxford, nevertheless the fact of these minute...
