Excerpt: . . . MY COUNTRY. My country! How can I begin my lay But with thy name! Thine image night and day Lives in my thoughts, that love to wander free In the sweet privilege of prayer for thee, My native land. They tell me of her woe Beneath the ban of war. Must it be so So hath it been before, when first she stood In all the bloom of primal maidenhood, Fresh from our fathers hands. How dearly bought Her liberty, with richest blessings fraught! So must it ever be. The jewel lost Is priceless; countless, then, must be the cost Of its redemption. Hath it not been so The bleeding heart and broken household know. Small is the conquest that the sword achieves; Tis by the mind true victory must be won, And wars wild sway, howeer successful, leaves The noble work of triumph...
