The next day was St. Andrew s Day, which is always observed as a general holiday in New South Wales; and accordingly all the shops were closed, and picnics, principally to Manly Beach, near the entrance of the Harbour, were the fashion for the day. A friend drove me to Paramatta, a distance of sixteen miles. Soon after leaving the town, we passed near the University, and then saw at intervals detached villas with orange trees in great numbers about them. Paramatta, or Rosehill, as it used to be called, was very early used as a convict settlement; and there too is a public domain and house, originally for the use of the Governor, but now let to a private individual. The church has two tablets in it to the memory of the Rev. S. Marsden, who was upwards of forty years chaplain...
