The name of the Surah is from the Parable of the Heifer in Ayah 67-71, which illustrates the insufficiency of carping obedience. When faith is lost, people put off obedience with various excuses; even when at last they obey in the letter, they fail in the spirit, which means that they get fossilized, and their self-sufficiency prevents them from seeing that spiritually they are not alive but dead. For life is movement, activity, striving, fighting against baser things. And this is the burden of the Surah. The Surah begins (1-29) by classifying men into three broad categories, depending on how they receive Allah's message. This leads to the story of the creation of man, the high destiny intended for him, his fall, and the hope held out to him (30-39). Israel's story is then told according to their own records and traditions-what privileges they received and how they abused them (40-86), thus illustrating again as by a parable the general story of man. In particular, reference is made to Moses and Jesus and their struggles with an unruly people: how people of the Book played false their own lights and in their pride rejected Muhammad, who came in the true line of Prophets (87-121). They falsely laid claim to the virtues of Father Abraham; he was indeed a righteous Imam, but he was the progenitor of Ismail's line (Arabs) as well as of Israel's line, and he with Ismail built the Ka bah (the House of Allah in Makkah) and purified it, thus establishing a common religion, of which Islam is the universal exponent (122-141). The...
