James F. Wilson, of Iowa, Delivered in the Senate of the United States, Wednesday, December 12, 1883 We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. This general declaration of doctrine harmonizes with the reciprocal character of allegiance and protection. And it was because of this that the framers of our Constitution projected that definite and comprehensive declaration of purpose formulated in the preamble to that instrument in the words: We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America. These ends could not be wholly attained except through the co-operative observance of the reciprocal obligations of allegiance and protection. We did not need the hard lessons and awful experience which came to this nation to affirm the correctness of the principle here stated. The broken...
